

Stephanie Collins is an Associate at Gibson Dunn, based in London, where she is a member of the firm's International Arbitration Group as well as its Environmental Social Governance Practice.

Stephanie specialises in international arbitration (investment treaty and commercial), as well as aspects of public international law. Stephanie has worked on numerous bilateral investment treaty and Energy Charter Treaty arbitrations. She also has experience in arbitrations administered by the ICC, LCIA and SIAC. Stephanie's focus is principally in the energy and infrastructure sectors. She also advises on business and human rights matters.

Prior to joining Gibson Dunn, Stephanie trained and practiced international arbitration for several years at a magic circle law firm, and was seconded to both its Singapore and Madrid offices. During this time, she also completed a nine month client secondment to the litigation team of an international oil company based in London.

Stephanie has a First Class LLB from University College London. She also spent one year studying at the National University of Singapore.